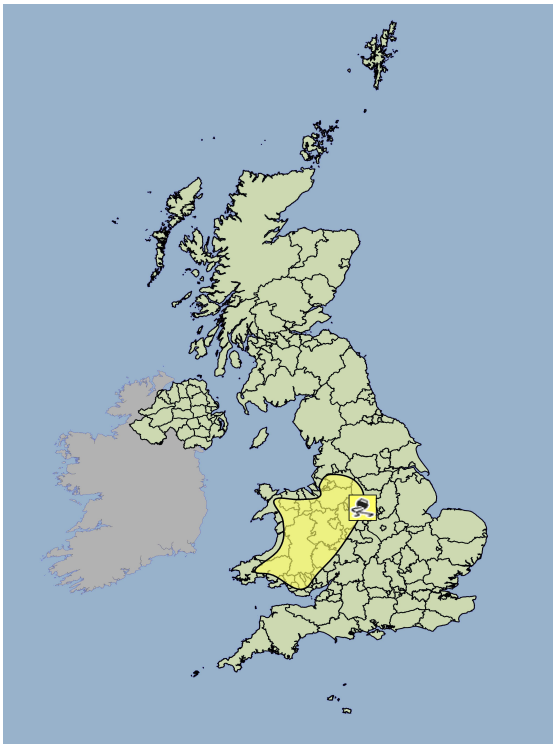
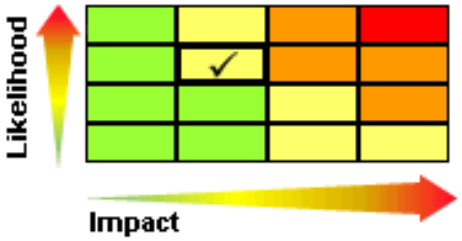
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Last night's rain, today's showers and some further showery outbreaks (including snow on hills) for a time tonight, will leave very wet surfaces across parts of Wales, western and central England. As skies clear later in the night, there is an increasing risk of ice forming.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 02:00 on Fri, 16th Jan 2015 until 10:00 on Fri, 16th Jan 2015

As rain and hill snow clears, there is the risk of icy stretches developing on untreated surfaces later tonight, exacerbated in places by run-off from fields following recent wet weather.

The public should be aware of possible tricky travel conditions on Friday morning.
